

Notes on Contributors

Guest Editors:

Milenko Petrovic is a Senior Lecturer at the National Centre for Research on Europe at the University of Canterbury, New Zealand. He lectures on 20th century Eastern European history and politics, Europe's economic development and EU Enlargement issues beyond 2004. His research focuses on post-communist political and economic transition in Central and South-Eastern Europe as well as the prospects for further EU Enlargement to the East.

John Leslie is a Lecturer in European Politics at Victoria University of Wellington. He teaches comparative Europe politics and European integration. His research compares the politics of market integration in the EU with other efforts to integrate markets regionally.

Contributors:

John Hopkins is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Canterbury Law School, Christchurch, New Zealand. His research focuses on the development of non-national forms of international and sub-national governance and their interaction with Constitutional Law. He has published widely in these areas, including the book, Devolution in Context (Cavendish, 2002). He is a former Deputy Director of the Institute of European Public Law and is the current Chair of the (New Zealand) National Centre for Research on Europe's Advisory Board.

Jeannette Prochnow is currently undertaking her PhD in Sociology at the Bielefeld Graduate School in History and Sociology (BGHS), Bielefeld University, Germany. She received her MA from Georg-August-University Göttingen, Germany in Cultural Anthropology and Sociology. She has been the recipient of an Excellence Initiative Scholarship (funded by the German Federal Ministry of Education and Research and the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft) and a Marie Curie Fellowship from the European Commission.

Andreas Siegert is a Lecturer at the International University of Corporate Education IBA, Erfurt. He also lectures at the University of Applied Sciences, Merseburg, and the Potsdam University. He was awarded his PhD from the Faculty of Sociology of the Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz University, where he wrote on "Motives of highly qualified Russian Transmigrants to migrate to Germany". He has published several articles on questions of international management and migration of highly qualified immigrants.

David Williams is a doctoral candidate in Comparative Literature at the University of Auckland, his research focusing on the post-Yugoslav writing of novelist and essayist Dubravka Ugrešić and the notion of Trümmerliteratur Redux – a post-1989 "literature of the Eastern European ruins." Williams has taught composition, translation, and contemporary and comparative literature at the Universities of Eastern Sarajevo (2000-1), Belgrade (2001-2), Novi Sad (2002-4), and Auckland (2008-9), published travel writing and music and literary reviews, and has recently presented conference papers at universities in the US, UK, and Australasia. His research interests centre on Central and Eastern European literature and film, particularly from the former Yugoslavia and reunified Germany.
